

Niching Down or Staying Broad

The goal is not perfection — it is clarity.

A Niche Is the Type of Business You Focus On.

Niching down = saying 'this is the type of business I mainly help.'

Dentists

Gyms

Real Estate Agents

E-commerce Brands

Aesthetic Clinics

Car Dealerships

Roofing Companies

Online Coaches

Staying broad = open to different types while keeping the same core service: paid growth.

Specific Offers Feel More Relevant. More Useful.

BROAD

"I help businesses grow through paid ads."

NICHED

"I help gyms get more leads through paid ads and better creatives."

Why the niched version wins:

More direct

Speaks to a specific person with a specific problem.

More relevant

The business owner feels like you understand their world.

Easier to trust

Specificity signals expertise, even when you're new.

Broad Can Work. But It Must Still Be Clear.

Not forcing a niche is fine — especially when you want to get moving quickly.

✓ BROAD IS OK WHEN...

- ✓ You don't know which niche yet
- ✓ You want to test first
- ✓ Action matters more than perfection
- ✓ You still sound clear and focused

✗ BROAD GOES WRONG WHEN...

- ✗ It becomes vague or messy
- ✗ You say yes to everything
- ✗ Your offer loses focus
- ✗ You stop sounding useful

Pick Based on Business Sense, Not What Sounds Cool.

Ask these 3 questions before committing to a niche.

01

Demand

Does this type of business actively need more customers and use marketing to get them?

02

Ability to Pay

Can this business realistically afford your service fee and their ad spend?

03

Simplicity

Is it easy to understand how this business makes money and what result they want?

Choose something that makes business sense — not just something that sounds exciting.

Research Your Niche Before You Commit.

Meta Ad Library

Research what businesses in your niche are already advertising. See which markets are active, what creatives they run, and whether they're spending on ads.

Open Meta Ad Library →

Google Maps

Find local businesses in specific niches — dentists, gyms, clinics, real estate. One of the fastest ways to explore local niches and spot businesses with an online presence.

Open Google Maps →

Google Search

Research niche demand. Search a niche + 'near me', 'book now', or 'free quote' to see how commercial and active that market is before you commit.

Open Google →

KEY TAKEAWAY

Niche or broad —
both can work.
Clarity is what matters.

You don't need a perfect niche on day one. You need direction.

→ Get moving first

→ Sound clear and relevant

→ Refine as you go

→ Use the 3-question test